GOCCIA DESK

by Casper Schwarz Architects

An elevated approach to the complete workstation

Goccia Desk responds to the evolution of workspaces from private, to open, to a return to private, focused work. With an organic shape and integrated meeting space, Goccia Desk breaks with conventional workspace layouts to offer a softer approach to the office landscape.

Developed by Casper Schwartz Architects for the Brussels offices of global law firm A&O Shearman, the program was carefully developed to support and enhance the professional services of their diverse staff of attorneys and knowledge workers.

Characterized by fluid shapes, rounded edges and tactile materials, Goccia offers a sense of calm and refinement.

Casper Schwarz is known for his vision of interior architecture: a workspace should be more than just a collection of furniture; it should create an environment where people feel inspired and energized. "In recent decades, too much emphasis has been placed on pure functionality, resulting in the beauty of workspaces sometimes being lost. With the Goccia Desk, we aim to bring a new balance between form and function, making the workspace not only efficient but also aesthetically pleasing and comfortable," said Schwarz.

Casper Schwarz Architects was founded in 2006 with one clear thought in mind: an architect should be a team player. Through collaborating, developing, listening, adjusting, and improving, they find their key to an interior design in which people feel comforted, inspired, and energized and renewed.

Rigorous collaboration between Casper Schwarz and Bulo's product design team was the hallmark of our approach to this dynamic product development. Though originally designed as a bespoke solution, the result of our collaboration has tremendous commercial appeal.

Open office to enclosed / semi-enclosed spaces with a single visual vocabulary

Goccia Desk was developed within the constraints of the physical architecture. of the project site, in a historic building in Brussels, Belgium. Reenforcing the client's need for private single- and double-occupancy offices, the Goccia program explored worksurface shapes and leg support options that would complement arrangements in any configuration.

Rather than responding to hierarchical organizational ideals, Goccia establishes an elegant workspace that elevates the entire office. Creating a space in which to focus deeply engages a spirit of high performance for most knowledge workers.
